We are now concluding our third full year as The Condor: Ornithological Applications. Our peer reviewers are the foundation of our scientific integrity. Despite little personal gain, 214 colleagues lent their expertise for the benefit of our journal and our discipline during the period that volume 118 was in preparation. Individuals identified with asterisks were especially dedicated; they reviewed two, three, or even four manuscripts. On behalf of The Condor: Ornithological Applications, I thank all of them for their timely and conscientious work. Managing reviewers is mostly the job of Associate Editors, whose names appear on the journal's masthead. Their work, along with the efforts of our two fine Editors and the tireless professional staff at the Central Ornithology Publication Office (COPO), allows us to be proud of the journal we collectively produce.
