

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am indebted to the many people who have observed or studied cockatoos and taken the time to publish the results. This book could not have been written without access to their material, much of which was reported in the journals and newsletters of state and national ornithological societies and associations. I would also like to thank the many people with whom I have discussed cockatoo ecology and conservation over the past decade, and who have shared their observations and insights.

I am especially grateful to those who have welcomed me into their homes and gone out of their way to show me the local cockatoos, in particular Stephen Garnett, Gabriel Crowley, Richard Hill and Tony Kirkby. I would like to acknowledge and thank colleagues who made available unpublished research findings, including Tamra Chapman, Les Christidis, Rick Dawson, Ron Johnstone, Tony Kirkby, Peter Mawson, Stephen Murphy, Janette Norman, Lyn Pedler and Jason van Weenen. Some of the many others who contributed information include Damon Oliver, David Parker, John Turbill and Rick Webster.

Government agencies were an important source of up-to-date information on the biology, status and management of cockatoo species. Tamra Chapman, Rick Dawson and Peter Mawson from the Western Australian Department of Environment and Conservation provided invaluable assistance while I was in Western Australia and at other times. David Brennan from the Victorian Department of Sustainability and Environment briefed me on the Victorian cockatoo control program and was a valuable source of information on pest issues and control strategies. Ben Parker (Commonwealth Department of the Environment and Water Resources) and Dennis Moys provided an insight into the illegal trade in cockatoos. Jason van Weenen (SA Department for Environment and Heritage) kept me abreast of developments involving the Eyre Peninsula Yellow-tailed Cockatoo population. Leita Capp and Jean Horton (Qld Environmental Protection Agency) as well as Shael Martin (NT Department of Natural Resources, Environment & Arts) facilitated access to information on destruction permits issued by their agencies.

Peter and Val Gowland improved my understanding of the cockatoo trade in Australia and allowed me to photograph a number of species in their care. Dave and Deidre Patterson discussed forest conservation and
