

Chapter 3: How bats are designed and how they work

Flying-foxes have extremely good eyesight and excellent hearing and sense of smell. As well as for flight, wings are used for protection from the elements. The finger bones have exactly the same structure as in humans but are greatly elongated.