In Condor 107/1 (February 2005), the paper “Breeding biology of the Thorn-tailed Rayadito (Furnariidae) in south-temperate rainforests of Chile,” by Juan Moreno et al., contained some incorrect estimates by the authors. The Results on p. 74, first paragraph of the Reproductive Success section, final sentence should read (corrections highlighted in boldface): “Daily survival rates were 0.98, 0.99, and 0.99 during the laying, incubation, and nestling stages, respectively.” The authors regret these errors.
